² Denise Cote, United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting by designation.

1 Appeal from United States District Court for the Southern District of New 2 York (Richard J. Sullivan, J.), convicting defendant Stefan Van Der End, after a 3 plea of guilty, of engaging in drug trafficking activity, and conspiring to do so, in 4 violation of the Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Act (the “MDLEA”), 46 U.S.C.
5 §§ 70501 et seq. Because Van Der End has waived his Confrontation Clause and 6 jury trial right challenges to his conviction by pleading guilty, and because the 7 Due Process Clause does not require a nexus between the United States and 8 MDLEA violations that transpire on a vessel without nationality, we affirm the 9 conviction.

10 Affirmed.

1 POOLER, Circuit Judge:

2 Defendant-Appellant Stefan Van Der End appeals from a judgment of the 3 United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Richard J.
4 Sullivan, J.), convicting him, after a plea of guilty, of engaging in drug trafficking
5 activity, and conspiring to do so, in violation of the Maritime Drug Law 6 Enforcement Act (the “MDLEA”), 46 U.S.C. §§ 70501 et seq. Because Van Der 7 End has waived his Confrontation Clause and jury trial right challenges to his 8 conviction by pleading guilty, and because the Due Process Clause does not 9 require a nexus between the United States and MDLEA violations that transpire 10 on a vessel without nationality, we affirm the conviction.

11 BACKGROUND

12 I. Factual Background

13 Stefan Van Der End, a citizen of the Netherlands, was one of three foreign 14 nationals on board the Sunshine, carrying more than 1,000 kilograms of cocaine 15 from Grenada to Canada when it was stopped by the United States Coast Guard 16 on May 23, 2016. Richard Dow, the master of the Sunshine, told the Coast Guard 17 that the boat was registered in St. Vincent and the Grenadines (“SVG”) and 18 provided the vessel’s registration information. The next morning, Coast Guard officers boarded the boat—subject to the authority granted them by a treaty with SVG—and found more than 600 kilograms of cocaine below deck. The vessel began to sink after one of the crewmembers attempted to scuttle it, so the government was unable to recover all of the cocaine; however, the government subsequently learned that there were another 640 kilograms hidden on the Sunshine. Coast Guard officers detained Van Der End and the other members of the crew.

Coast Guard officers then inquired with SVG authorities about the Sunshine's registration. SVG authorities disclosed that the Sunshine's registration had expired on February 25, 2016, and that SVG did not consider the Sunshine to be subject to the SVG's jurisdiction. Van Der End and the other crewmembers who were on board the Sunshine were then brought to New York and subsequently arrested on June 3, 2016.

II. Procedural History

In an indictment filed on June 30, 2016, a grand jury indicted Van Der End and the other crewmembers with one count of manufacture and distribution, and possession with intent to manufacture and distribute, five kilograms and more of mixtures and substances containing a detectable amount of cocaine while aboard

1 a vessel subject to the jurisdiction of the United States in violation of the MDLEA, 2 46 U.S.C. §§ 70503(a)(1), 70504(b)(1), 70506(a); 18 U.S.C. §§ 3238 & 2; 21 U.S.C.
3 § 960(b)(1)(B), and one count of conspiracy to engage in the above-described 4 drug trafficking activity in violation of the MDLEA, 46 U.S.C. §§ 70503, 70506(b), 5 70504(b)(1); 18 U.S.C. § 3238; 21 U.S.C. § 960(b)(1)(B).³

6 On April 24, 2017, Van Der End filed a motion to dismiss the indictment 7 for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. He also challenged the constitutionality of 8 the MDLEA as applied to him on due process grounds and raised a Sixth 9 Amendment challenge to his prosecution based on the government's alleged 10 forum shopping. The same day, the government filed a motion in limine in 11 which it argued that the defendants should be precluded from arguing to a jury 12 that the Sunshine was not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

13 At a May 4, 2017, hearing, the district court orally ruled in favor of the 14 government on all issues. The district court also ruled that it would permit the 15 government to enter into evidence documents from the SVG government 16 regarding ownership of the Sunshine. After the district court's rulings, Van Der ³ The text of some of the MDLEA's provisions have since changed in ways that are immaterial for purposes of this appeal.

1 End stated that he intended to enter a guilty plea. The district court scheduled a 2 plea hearing for that same afternoon, during which Van Der End pled guilty to 3 both counts of the indictment without a plea agreement or otherwise reserving 4 any rights to challenge his conviction on appeal. The district court later 5 published an opinion and order formally announcing its ruling on subject matter 6 jurisdiction, statelessness, and the other challenges to the indictment Van Der 7 End and one of his codefendants had raised. United States v. Suarez, 16-cr-453 8 (RJS), 2017 WL 2417016, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2017).

9 On September 8, 2017, the district court sentenced Van Der End to 25 years 10 of imprisonment and five years of supervised release, and entered judgment the 11 same day. This appeal followed.

12 DISCUSSION

13 On appeal, Van Der End primarily argues that the district court erred by 14 denying his motion to dismiss the indictment because (1) the government 15 presented insufficient evidence that the Sunshine was a vessel subject to the 16 jurisdiction of the United States, (2) the Fifth and Sixth Amendments required 17 the district court to submit that question to a jury rather than decide it for itself, 18 and (3) his conduct lacked the nexus to the United States that due process requires. In reviewing the denial of a motion to dismiss an indictment, we review the district court's findings of fact for clear error and its conclusions of law de novo. United States v. Bout, 731 F.3d 233, 237-38 (2d Cir. 2013).

I. Evidence of Statelessness

A. The MDLEA's Requirements

As presently drafted, the MDLEA makes it a federal crime to engage in certain specified drug trafficking activity “[w]hile on board a covered vessel.” 46 U.S.C. § 70503(a). A “covered vessel” includes, as relevant here, “a vessel subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.” Id. § 70503(e)(1). A vessel may be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States if, inter alia, it is “a vessel without nationality.” Id. § 70502(c)(1)(A). For present purposes, a vessel is without nationality if “the master or individual in charge makes a claim of registry that is denied by the nation whose registry is claimed.” Id. § 70502(d)(1)(A). A claim of registry may be made in one of three ways: “(1) possession on board the vessel and production of documents evidencing the vessel’s nationality . . . ; (2) flying its nation’s ensign or flag; or (3) a verbal claim of nationality or registry by the master or individual in charge of the vessel.” Id. § 70502(e). “The response of a foreign nation to a claim of registry . . . is proved conclusively by certification of the Secretary of State or the Secretary's designee." Id. § 70502(d)(2).

"Jurisdiction of the United States with respect to a vessel subject to this chapter is not an element of an offense." Id. § 70504(a). Rather, "[j]urisdictional issues" that arise under MDLEA "are preliminary questions of law to be determined solely by the trial judge." Id. As we have recently explained, the function of MDLEA's jurisdictional language "is not to confer subject matter jurisdiction on the federal courts, but rather to specify the reach of the statute beyond the customary borders of the United States." United States v. Prado, 933 F.3d 121, 132 (2d Cir. 2019).

However, where there is no factual basis to find that the vessel on which a defendant was apprehended was a vessel subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, the defendant may still be permitted to raise that issue on appeal even after pleading guilty. That is because "a defective guilty plea will not necessarily be deemed to waive all objections to a conviction." Id. at 151. And when the government's proof that a vessel was subject to the jurisdiction of the United States is lacking, a district court might run afoul of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(b)(1)(G), which "requires that the court must inform the defendant of, and determine that the defendant understands, . . . the nature of each charge to which the defendant is pleading,” and 11(b)(3), which “requires the court to determine that there is a factual basis for the plea,” rendering the defendant’s guilty plea invalid. Id. at 152 (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks omitted).

B. The Sunshine Was a Vessel Without Nationality

Van Der End argues that the government did not present sufficient evidence from which the district court could properly conclude that the Sunshine was a vessel without nationality. He argues that the district court’s reliance on the State Department certification violated the Confrontation Clause because it amounted to a testimonial statement by a witness whom Van Der End did not have an opportunity to confront. This argument is without merit. Van Der End’s guilty plea waived his right to raise that Sixth Amendment challenge to the evidence on which the government’s prosecution relied. Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243 (1969) (observing that “the right to confront one’s accusers” is among the “federal constitutional rights [that] are involved in a waiver that takes place when a plea of guilty is entered”); United States v. Dhinsa, 243 F.3d 635, 651 (2d Cir. 2001) (“[A] defendant who enters a plea of guilty waives his rights under

1 the Confrontation Clause.”); see also Class v. United States, 138 S. Ct. 798, 803
2 (2018) (differentiating claims that call into question “the very power of the State 3 to prosecute the defendant” from constitutional claims “related to events (say, 4 grand jury proceedings) that had occurred prior to the entry of the guilty plea” 5 (internal quotation marks omitted)).

6 Moreover, we are satisfied that the evidence the government presented of 7 the Sunshine’s statelessness sufficed. In Prado, we found problematic the “Coast 8 Guard boarding party’s inattention” to the MDLEA’s procedures for establishing 9 a vessel’s statelessness. 933 F.3d at 130. Most significantly, the government there 10 relied on the fact that the master of the vessel did not make a verbal claim of 11 nationality or registry; however, the government adduced no evidence that “an 12 officer of the United States authorized to enforce applicable provisions of United 13 States law,” 46 U.S.C. § 70502(d)(2), had made such a request. Id. at 130 & n.5.
14 And, because the Coast Guard had destroyed the vessel, “it became virtually 15 impossible for the government to demonstrate to the court in the statutorily 16 mandated preliminary hearing that the vessel was subject to the jurisdiction of 17 the United States and therefore that the MDLEA applied.” Id. at 132. Further, at 18 the defendants’ plea allocution, the district court made “no reference either to the 1 requirement that the vessel have been subject to the jurisdiction of the United 2 States or to the crucial issue of its statelessness,” nor did the defendants 3 “demonstrate awareness . . . of the crucial significance of statelessness.” Id. at 4 152-53. Thus, neither through the Government’s evidence nor the defendants 5 themselves, was there any “factual basis for the plea.” Id. at 153.

6 Here, however, the Coast Guard’s investigation suffered none of the same 7 defects. As explained above, Dow, the master of the Sunshine, claimed that the 8 vessel was registered in SVG and provided the Coast Guard with SVG 9 registration information. That sufficed to make a claim of registry. See 46 U.S.C.
10 §§ 70502(e)(1), (e)(3). The Coast Guard then contacted SVG officials who “refuted 11 the vessel’s claimed nationality.” App’x at 55. That established that the vessel 12 was without nationality. See 46 U.S.C. § 70502(d)(1)(A). Finally, the government 13 produced a certification from the United States Department of State that “proved 14 conclusively” the response of the SVG government. See id. § 70502(d)(2).

15 In short, a MDLEA defendant does not automatically waive his or her 16 ability to challenge the sufficiency of the government’s evidence regarding 17 whether a vessel is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States by pleading 18 guilty. See Prado, 933 F.3d at 151-52. However, that does not mean that a MDLEA

1 defendant who enters an unconditional guilty plea may still challenge all aspects
2 of the government's evidence. We are satisfied here that there was a factual basis 3 for Van Der End's guilty plea, such that he has waived his right to challenge the 4 district court's determination that the vessel was subject to the jurisdiction of the 5 United States.

6 II. Jury Trial Rights

7 Van Der End further argues that the district court was required to submit 8 to a jury the question of whether the Sunshine was subject to the jurisdiction of 9 the United States. This argument fails for much the same reason his 10 Confrontation Clause argument fails. By pleading guilty, Van Der End waived 11 his right to a jury trial. McMann v. Richardson, 397 U.S. 759, 766 (1970); see also 12 Class, 138 S. Ct. at 804-05.

13 To be clear, we recently recognized that, if the issue were properly 14 presented for appellate review, Section "70504(a)'s provision that the jurisdiction 15 of the United States be determined solely by the trial judge" might be stricken as 16 violative of a criminal defendant's right to a jury trial. Prado, 933 F.3d at 139 n.9; 17 see also id. at 157 (Pooler, J., concurring in the judgment). We thus cautioned that 18 district courts would be well advised "to submit the issue of jurisdiction over the vessel to the jury notwithstanding the statutory word ‘solely’ — “after making the preliminary determination required by § 70504(a) so that trial may proceed.” Id. at 139 n.9. But here, the district court had no opportunity to submit the question to a jury because Van Der End pled guilty after the district court made the preliminary determination MDLEA requires.

III. Due Process

Finally, Van Der End argues that his prosecution violated the Due Process Clause because there was no nexus between the offense conduct and the United States. The government contends that no nexus is required because the Sunshine was a stateless vessel and, even if a nexus were required, there was a sufficient nexus here to satisfy due process.

As a threshold matter, we hold that Van Der End did not waive this challenge to his prosecution by pleading guilty. We have previously held that a criminal defendant who pleads guilty waives the argument “that the indictment to which he [or she] pled guilty failed to adequately allege a nexus between his [or her] alleged conduct and the United States, as required by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment before a criminal statute may apply extraterritorially.” United States v. Yousef, 750 F.3d 254, 256, 262 (2d Cir. 2014).

1 However, the Supreme Court has since clarified that a guilty plea does not “by 2 itself bar[] a federal criminal defendant from challenging the constitutionality of 3 the statute of conviction on direct appeal.” Class, 138 S. Ct. at 803. Although 4 criminal defendants cannot “contradict the terms of the indictment” to which 5 they pled guilty “or written plea agreement[s]” pursuant to which they pled 6 guilty, defendants may still raise constitutional challenges to the statute of 7 conviction that “can be resolved without any need to venture beyond the 8 record.” Id. at 804 (internal quotation marks omitted). In other words, criminal 9 defendants who have pled guilty may still “challenge the Government’s power 10 to criminalize [their] (admitted) conduct,” “thereby call[ing] into question the 11 Government’s power to constitutionally prosecute” them. Id. at 805. Here, Van 12 Der End raises precisely such a challenge. Whether the Due Process Clause 13 requires MDLEA crimes committed on board a stateless vessel to have a nexus to 14 the United States is a purely legal question on which the government’s 15 constitutional power to prosecute Van Der End turns.

16 Nevertheless, Van Der End’s challenge fails on the merits. We have 17 previously held that the MDLEA’s predecessor statute did not, as a statutory 18 matter, require a nexus. United States v. Pinto-Mejia, 720 F.2d 248, 261 (2d Cir.

1 1983), modified in part on denial of reh'g, 728 F.2d 142 (2d Cir. 1984); United States v.
 2 Henriquez, 731 F.2d 131, 134 (2d Cir. 1984). We now hold that due process does 3 not require that there be a nexus between the United States and MDLEA 4 violations that transpire on a vessel without nationality.⁴ To begin with, the 5 MDLEA indisputably has extraterritorial application. 46 U.S.C. § 70503(b)
 6 (“Subsection (a) [which proscribes specified drug trafficking activity] applies 7 even though the act is committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United 8 States.”). And “[w]here Congress expressly intends for a statute to apply 9 extraterritorially, . . . the burden is a heavy one for a defendant seeking to show 10 that extraterritorial application of the statute violates due process.” United States 11 v. Epskamp, 832 F.3d 154, 168 (2d Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted).

12 Van Der End cannot meet that burden. Although we have adopted a 13 “‘sufficient nexus’ test for determining whether the extraterritorial application of 14 federal criminal law comported with constitutional due process,” id., MDLEA 15 prosecutions involving stateless vessels do not present the same concerns that are present in the extraterritorial application of typical criminal statutes. That is because stateless “vessels are international pariahs” that “subject themselves to the jurisdiction of all nations solely as a consequence of the vessel’s status as stateless.” United States v. Caicedo, 47 F.3d 370, 372 (9th Cir. 1995) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Because stateless vessels do not fall within the veil of another sovereign’s territorial protection, all nations can treat them as their own territory and subject them to their laws.” Id. at 373. Thus, when a vessel is subject to the jurisdiction of another nation, a person trafficking drugs on board “would have a legitimate expectation that because he has subjected himself to the laws of one nation, other nations will not be entitled to exercise jurisdiction without some nexus.” Id. at 372. The same is not true when “a defendant attempts to avoid the law of all nations by travelling on a stateless vessel.” Id. at 372-73.

The purpose of requiring a sufficient nexus with the United States is to prevent extraterritorial application of U.S. criminal laws from being “arbitrary or fundamentally unfair.” See Epskamp, 832 F.3d at 168 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also United States v. Ballestas, 795 F.3d 138, 148 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (same). That “ultimate question” of arbitrariness or unfairness, Ballestas, 795 F.3d at 148 (internal quotation marks omitted), in turn, hinges in part on the notion of 1 “fair warning.” Epskamp, 832 F.3d at 169. “The idea of fair warning is that no 2 [person] shall be held criminally responsible for conduct which he [or she] could 3 not reasonably understand to be proscribed.” United States v. Al Kassar, 660 F.3d 4 108, 119 (2d Cir. 2011) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Fair warning does 5 not require that the defendants understand that they could be subject to criminal 6 prosecution in the United States so long as they would reasonably understand that 7 their conduct was criminal and would subject them to prosecution somewhere.”

8 Id.

9 In other words, no nexus is required for the government to bring MDLEA 10 prosecutions against persons who are trafficking drugs on board stateless vessels 11 because such prosecutions are not arbitrary, since any nation may exercise 12 jurisdiction over stateless vessels, and they are not unfair, since persons who 13 traffic drugs may be charged with knowledge that such activity is illegal and 14 may be prosecuted somewhere. On that score, we have little trouble concluding 15 that those who participate in international drug trafficking activity are aware 16 that such conduct is illegal. See 46 U.S.C. § 70501 (congressional findings that 17 “trafficking in controlled substances aboard vessels is a serious international problem [and] is universally condemned”). In this context, that is all due process requires.

CONCLUSION

We have considered the remainder of Van Der End’s arguments and find them to be without merit. For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.
